Overview

Dalene R. Bramer represents and advises employers in a broad range of employment and labor law matters, including wage and hour, discrimination, harassment, wrongful termination and class action litigation.

Dalene has represented employers in federal and state court litigation, and before other state and federal agencies, including the Department of Labor Standards Enforcement.

Prior to joining Littler Mendelson in 2009, Dalene served as a judicial extern for Federal District Court Judges Sandra B. Armstrong and Susan Y. Illston of the Northern District of California. While attending law school, she served as the Executive Articles Editor for the University of San Francisco Law Review and participated in an employment law clinic where she acted as a mediator in small claims court. She also represented claimants in Equal Employment Opportunity Commission mediations and wage and hour hearings.

In her previous career, Dalene spent nine years as a dancer with the San Francisco Ballet.
