Overview

Dinora Orozco focuses on handling discrimination and harassment claims, wage and hour disputes, and workers compensation. She also provides pro bono services to immigrants and helps with their petitions before immigration authorities.

Dinora graduated from Washington University in St. Louis School of Law as a scholarship recipient for the Curt Burwell & Christine Ryan Scholarship and earned a certificate in public interest. She was a Hispanic Scholarship Fund Scholar and Leadership Council on Legal Diversity Scholar. During law school, she served as a staff editor and executive articles editor for the Washington University Journal of Law and Policy. She was also a summer associate at Littler.

Prior to law school, Dinora worked at a nonprofit public interest law firm that conducts civil rights litigation and advocacy for prisoners.
